More deaths linked to fentanyl

HEALTH

Drug suspected as a cause after fatal overdoses on the weekend

Matt Kieltyka
Metro | Vancouver

Police are renewing their public warning on fentanyl after two people died of suspected drug overdoses this weekend.

The first incident happened Saturday night, when two teenage boys, aged 16 and 17, were found unconscious in Shelley Park. According to Vancouver police, the pair purchased and consumed green pills with the number 80 on them, believing them to be OxyContin.

While the 16-year-old recovered and has since been released from hospital, police announced Monday morning that the 17-year-old has died.

That follows another incident in North Vancouver on Friday, where a 31-year-old man died after a family member found him in medical distress.

North Vancouver RCMP and emergency responders were called to the scene by were unable to revive the man.

The presence of fentanyl, often laced with other street drugs or falsely sold as OxyContin, is suspected in both deaths, though police are awaiting the results of toxicology tests to confirm its presence.

"We won't know for certain the cause of death, (but) even the suspicion of a link to fentanyl warrants another public safety announcement," said North Vancouver RCMP Cpl. Geoff Harder in a written statement.

RCMP first issued a warning about fentanyl after the July 20 deaths of married couple Hardy Robert and Amelia Leighton. The B.C. Coroners Service confirmed the presence of fentanyl in that case.

Many police departments, including Vancouver, North Vancouver, Surrey, Abbotsford and Coquitlam, have already issued public safety warning about its prevalence this year.

While the overall number of drug overdose deaths have not spiked, the service says the presence of fentanyl is becoming more common.

The drug was detected in 25 per cent of overdose deaths in B.C. last year, compared to five per cent in 2012, and the B.C. Centre for Disease Control (BCCDC) acknowledged in a recent article that fentanyl-detected deaths "represent an emerging public health concern in B.C."

Vancouver police urged users to use Insite, the city's supervised injection facility, after an increase in overdoses last summer.

In February, the BCCDC, RCMP and Vancouver police launched a wider public awareness campaign intended to educate users about fentanyl-related overdoses and recommend prevention strategies.

The medication naloxone is available in B.C. as take home kits, via prescription for those at risk of an overdose, to reduce severe harms of opioid overdose.

Training is available to drug users, as well as their family, friends and service providers, according the BCCDC.

B.C. a key election battleground

POLITICS

Province has increased number of ridings to 42

Matt Kieltyka
Metro | Vancouver

A strong show in British Columbia is critical to any party's hopes of a majority government in October's federal election, according to a UBC political scientist.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper asked Gov. Gen. David Johnston to dissolve Parliament Sunday, touching off an 11-week campaign in advance of an election Oct. 19.

That triggered a flurry of campaign launches across the country, including Vancouver where Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau kicked-off his campaign before taking part in the Pride Parade.

B.C. will be a key battleground for all parties in the weeks ahead, according to University of British Columbia political scientist Max Cameron,

"I think it's hard to see any party having a majority victory without a lot of support in Toronto and Vancouver," said Cameron. "B.C. will be important."

Not only has B.C. increased its number of ridings to 42, from 36, but it also has a diverse set of urban, suburban and rural ridings with very different views of the economy, resource development and the environment that can help or hinder various candidates.

Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau speaks during his election campaign launch in Vancouver on Sunday. The federal election will be held on Oct. 19. DARRYL DYCK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

But one factor will matter most British Columbians, Cameron believes.

"The main issue here is stability versus change," he said. "The Conservatives will say they have a record of sound fiscal management while the NDP and Liberals say it is time for change."

Rising debt, tanking resource prices and unfulfilled job promises could help the NDP make in-roads in Conservative-held suburban B.C. ridings, Cameron predicts.

And with so many Conservative cabinet ministers (including Port Moody's James Moore) not seeking re-election, the spotlight is firmly on the Prime Minister.

"This will be a real referendum on Harper and whether you like him, or not," said Cameron.

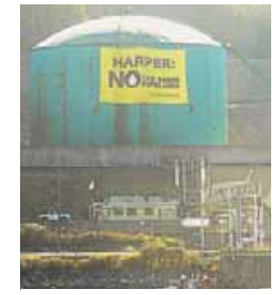
Three ridings to watch



Trans Mountain Terminal in Burnaby, B.C.

BURNABY NORTH-SEYMOUR
is the Frankenstein monster of B.C.'s new ridings. Stitched together with the head of Conservative-held North Vancouver and body of NDP-held Burnaby – it is also no stranger to frightened townsfolk and pitchforks. After all, this is where Kinder Morgan's proposed pipeline expansion terminates. The NDP is running an outspoken critic of the pipeline, Carol Baird Ellan, while the Conservatives have recruited three-term District of North Vancouver councillor Mike Little.

VANCOUVER EAST
It's long been an NDP stronghold, but that's because deputy leader Libby Davies has been representing the riding since 1997. Now that Davies has stepped away from political life, rival parties believe Vancouver East could be there for the taking. Liberal candidate Edward Wong is challenging Davies' successor, ex-NDP MLA Jenny Kwan.

Ex-NDP MLA Jenny Kwan

Ex-Surrey Mayor Dianne Watts

SOUTH SURREY-WHITE ROCK-CLOVERDALE
A noteworthy riding not for the competition (outgoing Conservative MP Russ Hiebert secured a fourth term with 54 per cent of the vote in 2011), but because this is where former Surrey mayor Dianne Watts will make her first run in federal politics.

Butts blamed for lawn blaze

A Langley homeowner is calling attention to reckless littering after his lawn was set ablaze, seemingly by a few irresponsibly discarded cigarette butts, over the long weekend.

The midday Sunday fire came within about five feet of Robyn Lundstrom's house in Brookswood on 44B Avenue, where he lives with his wife and two sons.

Luckily for Lundstrom, who wasn't home at the time of the fire, a neighbour spotted the blaze and put it out with a garden hose. They found a couple cigarette butts on the corner of the lawn right beside the road, Lundstrom said Monday.

"The grass is mostly dead and very short. We sprinkled the lawn for about an hour to make sure it was good and out," he said, adding that his neighbours were very conscious of watering during Stage 3 water restrictions.

Lundstrom posted a picture of the fire to the website Reddit to draw attention to how bad it is to throw away cigarette butts in the midst of drought-like conditions.

"This is the driest the grass has been.... Littering is bad at the best of times, but right now it's just pants-on-the-head stupid," he said.

"Lots of people are grateful, including myself, that nothing more became of it."

Lundstrom didn't report the incident to police since he didn't see much likelihood of catching the culprit. He will wait until spring to see if the lawn rejuvenates itself — and just hopes the Google Maps car doesn't drive by before then to immortalize the incident.

Fire departments across Metro Vancouver have been busy responding to brush fires this season due to exceedingly hot and dry conditions.

Only 19 businesses set up temporary patio space

Those who envisioned massive outdoor celebrations might feel let down, but those who worried about noise pollution from alfresco parties are probably relieved.

Vancouver's inaugural Patio Day passed on Monday without much fuss, as only 19 establishments took the city up on its offer to allow temporary patios on the sidewalk or in parking stalls.

In Gastown, people quietly enjoyed lunch and ice cream on the expanded patios at the Flying Pig and Soft Peaks, with passersby oblivious to the fact that these lovely outdoor seating arrangements were temporary.

But Vision Vancouver Coun. Heather Deal said the day was a great success.

> People just love sitting outside, especially when we get these warm summer days.
> Heather Deal

"It's an idea the mayor brought forward quite recently.... I think next year will be even bigger and better, but on short notice we're absolutely thrilled to get 19 signed up," Deal said Monday. "Maybe we'll even get Kim Mitchell here."

Deal, who told Metro she intended to visit a patio or two, noted that all kinds of businesses signed up for expanded space, including a bike shop, a bakery, restaurants and pubs.

"People just love sitting outside, especially when we get these warm summer days," she said. "You see it in a lot of other cities — plazas with chairs and tables. I love the way it animates the public realm."

As for the mayor, it's not clear if he reaped the rewards of his efforts. The mayor's office wasn't sure if he would have time to visit a patio before heading on vacation for a few days.

428 blazes this year caused by humans, official says

A human-caused wildfire burns Sunday at Harrison Lake, east of Vancouver. COURTESY B.C. WILDFIRE MANAGEMENT BRANCH

Fire officials say they are disappointed to see new human-caused fires burning across the province despite constant warnings about hot, dry conditions.

There have been 1,390 wildfires in B.C. this season, including 428 that were human-caused, said Provincial Fire Information Officer Kevin Skrepnek.

"To have to divert resources and personnel and expose ourselves to risk to address a preventable, human-caused fire is certainly disappointing," he said.

A fire discovered burning in slash and brush about 20 kilometres north of Harrison Hot Springs Sunday afternoon was started by humans, and has grown to more than half a square kilometre.

Skrepnek said it's hard to say exactly how big the blaze is.

"The fire is creating so much smoke, it's quite difficult to ascertain an accurate size at this point, just because of the wind and the conditions in the area."

Wind is fanning the aggressive fire, blowing smoke and embers which makes it difficult for fire crews to fight the flames.

About 70 personnel are working on the fire with four helicopters and heavy machinery.

Air tankers, including the famed Martin Mars bomber, attacked the blaze Sunday, dropping water and retardant.

The fire is not threatening any homes or structures, but several nearby campsites have been evacuated by RCMP.

The sites weren't immediately threatened by the fire and there was no official evacuation order issued, Skrepnek said, but the area was cleared to make it easier for fire crews to do their work.

A recent beginner sailing class saw three older women, a few law students and a novice sailor or two take to the high seas on five evenings.

Students did a bit of classroom study, then hopped into dinghies and let the wind carry them out into English Bay, white sails aloft. Gliding across the waves, they learned to tack and jibe, both alone and in pairs.

Instructors zipped by in Zodiacs to check on students' progress and ensure proper technique.

Denial slowed response time

ENVIRONMENT

Fuel spill report says owner's denial hindered Coast Guard

Thandi Fletcher
Metro | Vancouver

Denial by the owners of a grain carrier that their vessel was the source of a fuel spill in Vancouver's English Bay in April, as well as miscommunication between the Coast Guard and other groups, led to an almost two-hour delay responding to the emergency after it was first reported.

Those are the findings of an independent review commissioned by the Canadian Coast Guard after a malfunction on the grain carrier MV Marathassa on April 8 caused about 2,700 litres of bunker fuel to spill into the bay.

Former assistant coast guard commissioner John Butler conducted the review, released Friday, and made 25 recommendations on how future marine spills could be handled differently.

"The MV Marathassa incident was an operational discharge of a persistent fuel oil with high consequences," Butler told reporters. "The response was delayed by one hour and 49 minutes due to confusion of roles and responsibilities, miscommunications and technology issues."

Among his recommendations, Butler urged the Coast Guard to have adequate staff to respond to a major marine-pollution incident in any part of the region. Due to high staff turnover, he said Coast Guard staff members were also not adequately trained in the spill response plan.

"There was a lack of understanding of the roles and responsibilities in oil spill assessment and response by Coast Guard and Port Metro Vancouver," he said. "It was not initially clear who was leading and managing the initial response."

Butler also recommended the Coast Guard conduct exercises with First Nations and release accurate information as quickly as possible.

The report found that First Nations and local municipalities were not notified for 12 hours after the spill was first reported.

IN BRIEF

Vancouver's Celebration of Light finale attracts half a million people

Half a million people enjoyed Team Canada's fireworks display at the finale of the 25th annual Celebration of Light on Saturday night.

Vancouver police estimate about 400,000 people watched the display from the English Bay side and possibly another 100,000 watched from the Kitsilano side, according to police spokesman Const. Brian Montague. The display was judged the best of the three-night festival, with Team Canada winning the top prize over Brazil and China.

While there hundreds of smaller incidents – police counted 363 liquor pour outs, 82 liquor seizures, one weapon seizure, 94 tickets and 22 arrests – the event was generally safe and family friendly.

"From a safety perspective the fireworks have improved greatly over the years," Montague said in an email.

Canada will be at trade talks: Harper

TRANS-PACIFIC PARTNERSHIP

PM promises election campaign won't interfere

It's a campaign promise of a different sort: Stephen Harper says he won't let his marathon ballot battle keep Canada out of a massive international partnership billed as the backbone of future global trade in the Pacific Rim.

Talks to establish the long-promised 12-country Trans-Pacific Partnership will continue and Canada will be there, Harper promised — notwithstanding the protracted 11-week election campaign triggered by the prime minister himself.

The partnership, "should it be concluded, will in our view form the fundamental trading network of the entire Asia-Pacific region," he said during a campaign stop in Laval, Que., north of Montreal.

"It is important that Canada remain at the table; we will remain at the table during this election campaign ... and we will make sure that should there be a deal, we will get the best possible deal for this country."

New Zealand officials told The Canadian Press last week that the talks likely wouldn't wait until after the campaign — a sentiment echoed in media reports Monday by John Key, Harper's New Zealand counterpart.

Taking questions on the first full day of the campaign, Harper said negotiators would continue to defend Canadian interests, notably the country's supply management system, which protects dairy producers.

Officials say last week's talks in Hawaii came close to reaching a deal — indeed, sources said the Conservatives were hoping to make an agreement a central feature of the party's campaign kickoff on Sunday.

Canada had offered to allow more dairy imports, but the offers were far from what New Zealand and Australia were asking for, officials said. Dairy-market access was one of several sticking points at the 12-country negotiations.

The Canadian economy remained a central theme of the Tory tour Monday.

HITCHBOT

Creators mull rebuild after robot destroyed

The friendly Canadian hitchhiking robot that met its untimely end on the hard streets of Philadelphia might be given another chance at life.

HitchBOT's co-creators say they have been overwhelmed with support and offers to revive the child-sized robot since it was destroyed early Saturday and they are considering rebuilding it.

The robot was on a hitchhiking adventure in the U.S. after successful ventures in Canada and parts of Europe that saw strangers help hitchBOT travel from place to place while checking items off its bucket list.

This time, hitchBOT was dismembered before it could complete its goals — which this time included taking a selfie with the Hollywood sign and seeing the house from Pixar's "Up."

Frauke Zeller of Ryerson University and David Smith of McMaster University created hitchBOT and kept its adventures going as a social experiment with a number of their students.

Zeller said many people have reached out with offers to rebuild hitchBOT, and her team will make a decision on whether or not they will bring the robot back to life in coming days.

"We were taken quite by surprise because it's been going so well so far," she said.

"We don't really know what to do, so we have to sit down with the whole team and really see where we are and what can be done."

She said she knows the news has been heartbreaking for many of hitchBOT's fans, children and adults alike.

Since word got out, thousands of supporters have taken to social media to express their sadness and outrage: "I am incensed. I hope the perpetrators are found and punished. Long live the good memories. Hope to see you reincarnated soon!" wrote one Twitter user.

"If I could drive, I would have personally helped you across the USA and kept you safe," added another.

Smith said the robot's destruction is the exception to "many, many" unsupervised encounters that hitchBOT has had with strangers. THE CANADIAN PRESS

STUDY

Some cerebral palsy cases caused by genetic anomalies

Cerebral palsy, the most common cause of physical disability in children, has long been thought to result from brain injury in the fetus. But new Canadian research is challenging that notion, finding that at least one in 10 cases likely has an underlying genetic cause.

About two in every 1,000 babies born are affected by cerebral palsy. An estimated 50,000 Canadian children and adults have the condition, which leads to varying degrees of motor impairment, including muscle spasticity and involuntary movements.

Traditionally, cerebral palsy was believed to be caused by a stroke or infection of the brain in the developing fetus, or by birth asphyxia — a lack of oxygen to the infant during delivery.

But genetic testing of a group of affected children from across Canada found that in 10 per cent of cases, structural changes to the DNA appear to have given rise to the condition.

The research team, which includes physicians at the McGill University Health Centre in Montreal, performed genome sequencing tests on 115 children with cerebral palsy and their parents.

Privatization of space travel offers Canada opportunities

Michael Woods
Metro | Ottawa

The increasing privatization of space travel could spell good news for Canadian companies, and a newly released document shows the federal government is keeping an eye on it.

An April briefing note to outgoing Industry Minister James Moore notes the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's increasing reliance on private companies to provide launch spacecraft could open opportunities for Canadian companies to participate in the U.S. space agency's launches.

"NASA's increasing reliance on the private sector for its crew and cargo launch systems could represent opportunities for Canadian companies who are heavily integrated in U.S. space supply chains," says the document.

Metro obtained the briefing note under the Access to Information Act.

The 2011 retirement of NASA's space shuttle program marked the beginning of an increased commercial role in the agency's space program, the document says. For example, NASA now depends on the Russian Soyuz to transport crew to the International Space Station.

Meanwhile, Boeing and SpaceX are developing new manned spacecraft, and SpaceX and Orbital won a contract in 2012 to provide cargo launch services for NASA.

This "major shift" is making the space marketplace more competitive and accessible, the document notes, which spells good news for Canadian companies.

Tornado touches down in southwestern Ontario

Weather experts say a tornado ripped through a southwestern Ontario community Sunday night, tearing the roof from a bungalow and damaging several police cars.

Environment Canada issued a statement that said the violent winds of up to 220 kilometres per hour occurred in Teviotdale, west of Toronto.

It said the tornado left about nine kilometres of damage in its wake, including destroying the exteriors of two homes, ripping through barns, wrecking cars and downing both trees and power lines.

The tornado touched down at about 9 p.m. amid an extreme bout of rain, wind and hail in southwest and southern Ontario that knocked out power to thousands. THE CANADIAN PRESS

ORDER OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Honour awarded to Kevin Vickers

Kevin Vickers, the former sergeant-at-arms in Parliament, has been named a recipient of the Order of New Brunswick for his role in stopping a shooting spree by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau last fall.

Vickers stopped the gunman in the House of Commons last October shortly after Zehaf-Bibeau killed Cpl. Nathan Cirillo, who was standing guard at the National War Memorial, and rushed into the building with his rifle.

Premier Brian Gallant also named Camille Albert, an entrepreneur; Sister Arleen Brawley, for her work in addictions; Gary Gould, for his work with off-reserve aboriginal people; Brent Hawkes, for his leadership in support of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender rights; and photographer Thaddeus Holownia.

Also named were Carol Loughrey, for supporting women in business; Sister Adele Morin, for her work on behalf of children with intellectual disabilities; Dr. Rejean Thomas, a physician and a missionary; and Marlene Unger for her human rights, social justice and education work.

The Order of New Brunswick was established in 2000 to recognize individuals who demonstrate a high level of excellence and achievement in their particular field.

A ceremony to present this year's recipients with their awards will be held at Government House in Fredericton on Nov. 4. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Obama unveils his green plan

CLIMATE CHANGE

President sets strict limits for power plant emissions

U.S. President Barack Obama has announced even steeper greenhouse gas cuts from American power plants than previously expected, a challenge to the rest of the world to take serious action as a global summit to finalize a landmark climate change treaty approaches at the end of this year.

Obama's actions on climate change have faced opposition from Republicans and even some Democrats who fear the impacts on the U.S. economy.

Opponents plan to sue immediately, and to ask the courts to block the rule temporarily. The National Mining Association on Monday asked the Environmental Protection Agency to put the rule on hold while legal challenges play out.

The Obama administration last year proposed the first greenhouse gas limits on existing power plants in U.S. history, triggering a yearlong review. These final changes aim to address concerns raised by both environmentalists and the energy industry.

Some changes further cut the heat-trapping gases blamed for global warming. Other changes delay implementation and eliminate certain options that states could use to show they're cutting emissions, making it harder to comply.

Power plants will have to attain an even lower level of carbon dioxide pollution to be in compliance. Obama's proposal from last year set the target as a 30 per cent nationwide cut by 2030, compared to the levels in 2005. His new plan calls for a 32 per cent cut in the same time period.

Power plants account for one third of all U.S. emissions of heat-trapping gases.

DEVELOPMENT

UN aims to end global poverty

The 193 member states of the United Nations have reached agreement on a new development agenda for the next 15 years that calls for eradicating poverty and hunger, achieving gender equality, improving living standards and taking urgent action to combat climate change.

The draft agreement reached Sunday evening outlines 17 goals with 169 specific targets on issues ranging from ending poverty "in all its forms everywhere" to ensuring quality education and affordable and reliable energy, and protecting the environment.

> We can be the first generation that ends global poverty.
> Ban Ki-moon

"We can be the first generation that ends global poverty, and the last generation to prevent the worst impacts of global warming before it is too late," Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon told reporters Monday.

The document — called Transforming our World: The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development — will be adopted at a UN summit just before the annual meeting of world leaders at the General Assembly in late September.

Ban said "the goals represent a 'to-do' list for people and the planet."

The 17 new, non-binding goals will succeed the eight Millennium Development Goals adopted by world leaders 15 years ago.

Ebola virus back in Sierra Leone

WORLD HEALTH

CDC director assures public after two new cases found

Sierra Leone is in a stronger place than it was six months ago to fight Ebola, but the new challenge is to get to zero cases, the director of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said Monday during a visit, as new cases emerged in the city and in an area that had not seen the deadly virus for months.

Two new cases of Ebola surfaced in Sierra Leone's Northern Tonkolili District after a man died last week. The district had not had a single case of Ebola in five months. The victim contracted the disease in the capital, travelled to his home village, and was treated for a fever at the local hospital but authorities didn't call the Ebola emergency number. He didn't have a burial that followed special procedures required for Ebola victims.

The man's mother and brother contracted Ebola, the National Ebola Response Centre's OB Sisay said Sunday.

Authorities moved quickly to contain the spread, but more cases are feared, he said. Authorities quarantined 500 people.

"We now know where the virus is and we are tracking its movement, by surrounding, containing and eradicating its last remaining chain of transmission," Sisay said.

Dr. Thomas Frieden, CDC director, said it was important that the case was identified and not missed, and he was impressed with the speed of the response.

> "The challenge now is to get to zero cases and that is not going to be easy.
> OB Sisay, National Ebola Response Centre

"The challenge now is to get to zero cases and that is not going to be easy," he said. "Authorities must not let down their guard. The country should keep its guard up."

He said a new cluster of cases in an area of Freetown means Sierra Leone must still put in place measures that have worked in the past.

This Ebola outbreak has killed more than 11,200 people worldwide.

NATURAL DISASTER

Monsoon deaths in Pakistan reach 118

The death toll from flash floods triggered by seasonal monsoon rains in various parts of Pakistan has risen to 118 and floodwater has inundated vast areas, leaving tens of thousands homeless, authorities said Monday.

The National Disaster Management Authority said the flooding has affected more than 800,000 people in 2,275 villages. About 2,900 houses have collapsed or are partially damaged.

The northwestern Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province is the worst affected, with 59 deaths reported there. The Pakistani part of Kashmir and southern part of eastern Punjab province each reported 22 deaths.

In mid-July, monsoon rains followed by flash floods badly hit the northwestern city of Chitral, where flooding destroyed several bridges, homes, mosques, hotels and a power station.

‘Sense of panic’ in Greece

GREEK ECONOMY

Country’s main stock index takes dramatic dive

Greece’s top companies lost billions in market value in a matter of minutes on Monday, when the stock exchange plunged upon reopening after a five-week closure and investors worried over a dramatic new drop in the economy.

The main stock index shed more than 22 per cent soon after the open, as traders got their first opportunity since late June to react to the latest twists in the country’s economic drama.

The index closed 16.2 per cent lower, with bank shares hitting or nearing the daily trading limit of a 30 per cent loss.

“There’s a sense of panic,” said Evangelos Sioutis, financial analyst and head of equities at Guardian Trust. He noted some traders are selling stock merely to raise cash because there is so little liquidity in the Greek economy.

“There are no buyers,” he said. “The outlook is not clear.”

Markets in the rest of the world, however, were largely unaffected, a sign that investors outside Greece have now largely cut off ties with the country after years of crisis there. European shares closed higher.

> There are no buyers. The outlook is not clear.
> Evangelos Sioutis, head of equities at Guardian Trust

Greece’s stock market and banks were closed on June 29, when the government put limits on money withdrawals and transfers to keep a run on the banks from bringing down the financial system. People were panicking over the prospect that the country could fall out of the euro after its talks with creditors broke down.

Greece has since then resumed talks with creditors and reopened its banks. Strict limits on cash withdrawals remain, however.

Financial information company Markit said its gauge of manufacturing activity in Greece plummeted during the month to 30.2 points, its lowest ever reading, despite improvements across the rest of the 19-country eurozone.

“Manufacturing output collapsed in July as the debt crisis came to a head,” Markit economist Phil Smith said.

“Factories faced a record drop in new orders and were often unable to acquire the inputs they needed, particularly from abroad, as bank closures and capital restrictions badly hampered normal business activity.”

Meanwhile, a monthly survey of business and consumer confidence, the Economic Sentiment Indicator, fell for a fifth consecutive month in July to its worst level since October 2012. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

India orders telecoms to cut access to pornography

India has ordered Internet service providers to block access to more than 850 adult websites in what the government describes as a way to protect social decency.

N.N. Kaul, a spokesman for India’s department of telecom, said Monday the government was controlling easy access to pornography following a directive from the country’s top court.

Kaul said that while Internet service providers in India will have to bar access, users may still view the sites through virtual private networks and proxy servers. He said the move would protect children.

The leaked government order asks service providers to block access to the 857 sites on grounds of morality and decency.

The order has caused a furor with many in the country accusing the government of moral policing and infringing on personal freedoms. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nokia sells HERE Maps for $3.1 billion

A consortium of German automakers Audi, BMW and Daimler announced Monday it is buying Nokia’s HERE map business in a deal that values the unit at 2.8 billion euros ($3.1 billion) and secures their access to technology that could eventually be used for driverless cars.

Nokia, based in Finland, has refocused its business on producing equipment for wireless networks after selling its mobile phone handset operation to Microsoft Corp. The company said it expects to receive slightly over 2.5 billion euros from the sale, with the purchasers being compensated for HERE liabilities totalling nearly 300 million euros.

The three rival German automakers said that HERE is “laying the foundations for the next generation of mobility and location-based services.” They added that “for the automotive industry this is the basis for new assistance systems and ultimately fully autonomous driving.”

The automakers said in a joint statement that they will each hold an equal stake in HERE and “none of them seeks to acquire a majority interest.” They said that HERE’s management will remain independent, with the goal of being a platform “open to all customers,” and the consortium will not interfere in its operational business.

“High-precision digital maps are a crucial component of the mobility of the future,” Daimler CEO Dieter Zetsche said. “With the joint acquisition of HERE, we want to secure the independence of this central service for all vehicle manufacturers, suppliers and customers in other industries.”

Analysts at IHS Automotive noted that HERE, along with TomTom, is one of two companies supplying navigable maps globally as an alternative to Google and Apple. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SECOND QUARTER RESULTS

HSBC earnings drop 6.2 per cent

HSBC’s Canadian subsidiary says its second-quarter profit was down 6.2 per cent from the same period of 2014 to $227 million CDN.

The bank said the decline for the three-month period ending June 30 was mainly due to margin compression, lower gains on financial investments and higher costs.

Profit attributable to the common shareholder was $161 million CDN for the second quarter, down 6.4 per cent compared with the same period a year earlier.

Return on average common equity was 14.0 per cent, compared with 15.6 per cent for the second quarter of last year.

Commenting on the results, HSBC Bank Canada president and CEO Sandra Stuart said “We are focused on growing our business in Canada, however, we do expect current challenges to continue including pressure on the oil sector and related industries and prevailing low interest rates.” THE CANADIAN PRESS

the big question

Should you be worried about picky eating?

Kids these days, with their trans-fat-free, glutenless organic yogurt. Or do yours only eat orange food? Picky eating might be maddening, but new research published in the journal Pediatrics has The Associated Press telling parents to "take heart.... The problem is rarely worth fretting over." On the other hand, the Wall Street Journal said it "may not be as harmless as is commonly believed." In actuality, the findings were fairly intuitive. If your two- to five-year-old kids complain about broccoli, there is little cause for concern. But "severely picky" eaters — the three per cent of those studied who had difficulty eating with others due to their restrictions — were at least two times more likely to show symptoms of depression and social anxiety. No causation was shown.

New TransLink chief brings new transit hope

YOUR RIDE
Karen Quinn Fung

Let's say your workplace has just hired a new employee. Extraordinary circumstances aside, a good start typically involves talking up your new colleague's strengths and experiences. You'll usually wait a couple months before getting too deeply into the accolades or deficiencies of their predecessor.

In the case of the newly appointed minister in charge of TransLink, Peter Fassbender is less a new hire than an internal transfer.

And on a topic as contentious as public transit and transportation, no one's holding back on saying what they think anyone involved — be it the TransLink board, the mayors, the premier or the province — could be doing better. But the desire to kick off a solid working relationship remains.

There's no denying Fassbender's bona fides for grappling with transportation in the region: he's formerly the mayor of the City of Langley and he previously chaired the Mayors' Council, securing funding for the Evergreen Line rapid transit.

Here are three reasons I'm optimistic in the wake of this announcement:

1. Fassbender is well versed in both the carbon tax and mobility pricing. In 2009, while serving on the Mayors' Council, he stated he didn't think property tax was an effective long-term funding mechanism for transit. He'll know well how much local governments rely on property tax. This should mean fewer unhelpful jabs from the premier about property tax being a way out of the region's transportation problems.

2. He's not into repeating falsehoods about transit. Midway through the plebiscite, Fassbender had even-handed words for both sides during the voting period, notably calling out the No side for harping on a record of inefficiency at TransLink while acknowledging the issues with governance. That willingness to bridge will be helpful.

3. His role appears to grapple simultaneously with land use and transportation. TransLink being removed from the Ministry of Transportation and plunked into the lap of the minister of Community, Sport and Cultural Development may seem odd. But a basic maxim of urban planning is that the best transportation plan is a good land-use plan — and vice-versa. Fassbender's ministry works closely with municipalities. So this move can be seen as a refreshing acknowledgment of the inseparability of these two topics at the provincial level for puzzling out the Lower Mainland's movement woes.

None of these taken separately or together guarantees that this process will be any less acrimonious than what happened with the teachers' strike. Fassbender wading into this fray does give hope, though, of moving the conversation closer to being well informed.

In the wake of that highly divisive plebiscite, long on shrill opinion and short on depth or patience for many moving parts, it is a clear path to finding a way forward through our collective transportation predicament.

Every time a friend of mine succeeds, a small part of me sighs

Mum says comparison is the quickest way to unhappiness.

I know she's right but I can't stop it. And the worst is when I compare myself to friends.

The other day I listened to a friend recount a long list of creative projects she's accomplishing outside of a very busy job (a few zines, a few short stories, a blog) and secretly seethed.

I'm happy for her but frustrated at myself. Part of that makes no sense (I've never wanted to make a zine), and part of it is all too familiar.

I completed a degree in creative writing, and since I started working in journalism, I've battled the idea that I'm failing somehow in comparison to friends who regularly write and publish their fiction and poetry.

We all want to be the best, or even just our best, but given how much some people seem to be able to accomplish in life, the high-water mark is murky.

Maybe my best is a dual career as a novelist and non-fiction writer, who also raises three kids, sings in a band and curates a home of well-chosen oddities from my travels.

It's surely more than I am doing right now, given that Netflix is my bedmate.

Or, maybe my best is to spend so much time with Netflix I become an unlikely pop-culture writer who parses the work of Ruby Rose for deeper human insight.

It's easy to avoid comparison to Rose herself. I never wanted to be an actor. It's much harder not to compare myself to my jet-setting reporter friend who is both kind and talented, or my powerhouse editor friend who will rule this insulated media town before too long. I do OK because I love them and understand that we're different.

But the editor has fielded awkward treatment from women colleagues and friends less than comfortable with her success.

It seems that women know how to be friends and know how to be professionals, but there is tension when the two entwine. Part of it, I think, is the sense that there's only room for so many women at the top. But every person jealous of a friend has to ask how much they value that friend. And if they do, they need to find a way to get over their jealousy.

My parents never told me what they want me to be, beyond a happy, good person. They haphazardly read this column and are more concerned I call my grandmother, less concerned with my career trajectory.

So I have their example, as an antidote. And I bet I'll always need it.

Move over pre-drinks: study says pre-eat an Asian pear to prevent a hangover

Politics overtake the cake

LAYERS OF MEANING

Bakeries slice up ideologies American style

It should be a piece of cake. Customer comes in, asks for a cake with a specific design or for a particular event, baker makes it, everyone's happy.

But sometimes customers and bakers have clashed over what goes on the cake, or whether to make it at all. An Oregon bakery was fined $135,000 for refusing to bake a cake for a lesbian couple's wedding. A baker in Colorado earned a customer's ire because she refused to write anti-gay messages on his cake. A Louisiana man posted a video to the Internet lambasting a local Wal-Mart for not making a cake with a Confederate flag on it.

Somehow, this mix of flour, butter, eggs and sugar with frosting on top has become yet another delivery system for American political debate, raising questions about where the customer's free speech ends and the baker's begins.

"Cake has had symbolic meaning in this country," even aside from politics, said Stephen Schmidt, food historian and writer for the Manuscripts Cookbook Survey. "We think of cake as something that can carry that meaning, whereas I don't think the French do."

But some political experts question whether frosting florets on a cake really are the best way to get your way of thinking out there. Would a strongly worded tweet, letter to the editor or yard sign be a better choice than the grand unveiling of the cake to the tune of Happy Birthday?

"There's got to be some kind of psychological profile of individuals who deem it important enough to have their politics on their cake," said Doug Muzzio, political science professor at Baruch College. "Have their cake and ideology, too."

Some of the most contentious fights have involved bakers who refused to make a cake for same-sex weddings, frays that have also entangled the likes of florists and photographers.

Bakery owners Aaron and Melissa Klein of Gresham, Ore., said their religious beliefs would be violated in 2013 if they made a wedding cake for a lesbian couple. The women filed a discrimination complaint and were awarded damages.

There's also been the reverse. Last year, when a customer wanted anti-gay messages on a cake, Marjorie Silva, owner of Azucar Bakery in Denver refused to do it. She told him that she would bake the cake, but that he would have to write his own messages.

"We're human beings, too; we have our beliefs, we should be respected," she said

Free speech issues have come into play in jurisdictions with laws banning discrimination against certain protected classes.

Some bakers have argued that being forced to make a cake for something that went against their religious beliefs was a form of compelled speech by the government, barred by the First Amendment.

But courts have ruled that a business open to the public has to be open to everyone.

"The answer so far that courts have given is, no, it's not coercion ... because you do have a choice" about whether to be in business to the public, said Nelson Tebbe, professor at Brooklyn Law School.

Images and words perceived as hateful have raised yet another flavour of cake fight.

A Louisiana man in June wanted a local Wal-Mart to make a cake with an image of the Confederate flag and the phrase "Heritage Not Hate," but was refused. Chuck Netzhammer then ordered a cake with a flag used by the Islamic State group, which he got. Wal-Mart apologized and said the cake was a mistake, made by an employee that didn't recognize the flag and what it represented.

In 2009, a New Jersey supermarket refused to make a cake for a child whose full name was Adolf Hitler Campbell. The boy's mother said the cake was eventually made by a store in Pennsylvania.

For some cake makers, it's not for them to go against the customers' wishes.

Stacey Leon, of New York City's Butterfly Bakeshop, said she and husband keep their personal feelings out of the oven. While they've never been asked to make a cake they thought was truly objectionable, they have made cakes for causes they don't personally believe in.

"If it's a political party that we don't agree with, that doesn't mean we're not going to make their cake," she said. "We just have to separate the way we feel from our business."

ADVICE

Never act like a smug know-it-all, even if the boss is clueless

OFFICE RELATIONS
Eleni Deacon

They might in charge, but bosses don't always know best.

Maybe you're responsible for your organization's social media feeds, while your superior has never sent a tweet.

Or you could be the number-cruncher at a company where the CEO can't grasp basic math. When your understanding of your niche has your boss beat, articulating your needs and processes can be frustrating.

Here's how to navigate the knowledge gap.

First step: attitude check

Just because your manager lacks expertise in your area of specialization doesn't mean they're unintelligent or unqualified to lead.

High-ranking supervisors, especially if they are responsible for a range of teams across different departments, are likely more concerned with big-picture functioning than the nitty-gritty of individual positions.

So while your capabilities may far surpass your superior in certain domains, they probably possess a toolbox of skills you don't have.

After all, your boss' job isn't to do your job — it's to oversee your work.

Filling the cognitive holes

Which doesn't mean clueless leadership can't interfere with your day-to-day.

If you find yourself aggravated by your manager's missing intel, take it upon yourself to fill those cognitive holes. Adopt an informative approach, in which you provide thorough (and easy-to-follow) detail on the task or problem at hand, carefully outlining your favoured approach.

It might be tempting — and even self-satisfying — to passive-aggressively seethe over your boss' flimsy foundation in your particular sphere of interest.

But your work will go smoother if you arm them with the knowledge you wish they had.

Important: While offering your information, swap confrontation for collaboration. You may consider yourself smarter than your boss. Your relationship might be strained due to a perceived — or even real — lack of appreciation for your stresses and duties.

But if you want to educate the highers-up, don't act fed up. Be generous and patient with your explanations, and avoid smug or sarcastic comments.

Be an ally, not an enemy

During meetings, it may be a struggle not to roll your eyes — but you'll get a lot further if you establish yourself as an ally.

An oblivious boss can be a bummer — but they also represent an opportunity.

Instead of thinking of your uninformed manager as a nuisance, think of this situation as a chance to demonstrate your capabilities and authority within your professional realm.

Make your boss dependent on your insights, and your standing will rise. Then maybe, when the timing is right, you'll be made the boss.

"Help, I'm smarter than my boss!"

Your credit score is a big deal

IN YOUR BEST INTEREST

When it's time to borrow, a poor score will cost you

Kyle Prevost
youngandthrifty.ca

If you're like a lot of Canadians, the most important score in your life is the score in the hockey game last night. Your credit score might not make the priority list at all.

Your credit score is only important if you ever want to borrow money to buy a house, a car, or anything else. It can also be a pretty significant factor in determining if you can rent a decent place (depending on the landlord). So if you don't mind living with your parents and taking public transit the rest of your life (an excellent wealth-building plan if you can stomach it), then your credit score might not be that significant.

For the rest of us, that little three-digit number can quickly become a mountainous obstacle if ignored for too long.

Even if your score isn't quite bad enough to completely prevent you from purchasing a car or a house, the difference it can make in regards to the interest rates you pay can mean thousands of extra dollars leaving your pocket.

Score at your financial life by understanding the importance of your credit score. ISTOCK

Here's an example — two buddies each set out to buy their first car:

Johnny Savealot has a credit score of 775 after a few years of paying his bills on time and never borrowing more than he can repay at the end of the month.

John's buddy, Jimmy Yolo, has a credit score of 450. He's not too worried about money stuff like paying bills on time because it isn't what's really important in life. When he gets the third notice on his cellphone bill, or the landlord threatens to kick him out, he scrapes together the cash and it always seems to work out.

If John and Jim each want to purchase identical $20,000 (taxes included) used vehicles, and they each borrow $16,000 to do so, they will eventually pay very different overall prices for exactly the same car.

If John gets a 60-month loan at 4 per cent interest, he will pay back his $16,000 original debt, plus roughly $1,700 in interest payments.

Jimmy will have to get a subprime car loan because he is considered a higher risk and will have to settle for a 60-month loan at 20 per cent interest. He will be paying back the same $16,000 original debt over 60 months as Jim, but with about $9,400 in interest payments over that same stretch.

Obviously if a credit score can have that sort of impact on a car purchase, it can make a massive difference when it comes to mortgage payments on a house (if you can find a lender at all).

Don't be a Johnny Yolo; understanding how credit works will make that one life you have to live a lot more enjoyable.

CHECK IT OUT

Credit score tips

- Check your score regularly with the two credit reporting agencies: Transunion and Equifax. Make sure there are no errors.
- Pay your credit cards off at the end of every month. In a worst-case scenario at least make the minimum payment.
- Don't skip payments on utilities or consumer debt. The credit agencies are generally much more diligent than any policing agency, and they will find out.

HONEST SUNSCREEN

Burned by Alba?

Customers who have used Jessica Alba's Honest sunscreen are red hot with rage after the organic product allegedly failed to protect them against the sun's dangerous rays. Unhappy sun-lovers shared photos of their horrific sunburns on social media, as reported by Buzzfeed. One irate customer, A. Hughes, wrote, "My family of five used this sunscreen yesterday and all five of us are very burnt. You might as well slather yourself in baby oil because this is how well it works!" Another customer posted a picture of his bald head on Twitter with the caption, "This is my very real result from Honest 30 SPF sunscreen. Only spent one hour outside. Burnt."

Couple ready to call it quits, anonymous source says

IN HOLLYWOOD
Ned Ehrbar

Everything old is new again, including conclusive, concrete proof — from anonymous sources — that Will Smith and Jada Pinkett Smith are totally done as a married couple.

> They're exhausted from trying to maintain the facade of a happy union. Anonymous source, on Will Smith and Jada Pinkett Smith

"For Will and Jada, holding it together these past few years has been tough because their marriage has been on life support for a long time," a source tells Radar Online. "They've decided to pull the plug in a carefully choreographed manner (and) agree announcing their split at the end of the summer is the right move." Of course, because August is generally a pretty quiet month, with lots of folks on vacation, and you wouldn't want to blow a big announcement then.

"They tried to fix things with therapy, (but) it's not happening," the source says. "They're already moving on with their lives. All that's left is the inking of the divorce papers," as they've already "worked out a confidential settlement to protect their $240-million fortune and prepare their kids for the fallout." Given all the false alarms there have been about this kind of thing over the years, you'd think they'd be pretty well prepared already.

Walt Disney was not anti-Semitic: Expert panel

Walt Disney with an Irish setter in 1965. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Walt Disney was a complex figure, both celebrated and condemned, but allegations that he was a rabid anti-Semite are unproven, Disney experts said.

Talking to TV critics Sunday about a documentary on Disney set to air on PBS's American Experience in September, composer Richard Sherman (Disney's Mary Poppins, The Jungle Book) dismissed such lingering criticism outright.

It's "absolutely preposterous to call him anti-Semitic," said Sherman, the son of Jewish immigrants. He and his brother Robert, his writing partner, were treated like sons by Disney, he said.

Historian and social critic Neal Gabler, author of An Empire of Their Own: How the Jews Invented Hollywood, said he exhaustively researched Disney for the 2006 book Walt Disney: The Triumph of the American Imagination.

> I saw no evidence other than the casual anti-Semitism that (was common to non-Jews during Disney's 20th-century era) Historian Neal Gabler, author of An Empire of Their Own: How the Jews Invented Hollywood

"I saw no evidence other than the casual anti-Semitism that" was common to non-Jews during Disney's 20th-century era, Gabler said.

Sarah Colt, producer and director of the four-hour film airing Sept. 14 and 15, said a documentary she made about Henry Ford, whom she described as a "virulent anti-Semite," gave significant attention to his views.

But there wasn't any evidence that Disney held such attitudes, she said, although the label has been attached to the man who launched a still-expanding film, TV and theme park empire on the back of the Mickey Mouse cartoon character.

The panelists' agreement on that topic was in contrast with their differing views on other aspects of Disney's life and accomplishments.

"Everyone was terrified" of Disney as a boss, Gabler said, calling him a stern taskmaster. More than one panellist said that Disney didn't hesitate in firing workers. Another panellist said Disney treated his employees like family.

ANOTHER AWKWARD VIDEO GOES VIRAL, THE BIEBS GETS A NEW CRUSH

Let's not make this a thing

It looks like that awkward Cara Delevingne interview with Good Day Sacramento started a trend, and that's a terrible, terrible thing. Now poor Fantastic Four stars Michael B. Jordan and Kate Mara are getting the same treatment, with a radio host peppering them with obnoxious questions about how an African-American guy and Caucasian girl playing brother and sister is weird. "Am I missing something? You're white and you're black. How does this happen?" Rickman asks. And after Jordan dignifies that with a response, Rickman moves in on Mara's locks: "You're way, way hot," he told her. "Why'd you cut the hair? Your hair was beautiful." Stay classy, Rock 100.5's Southside Steve Rickman.

So speaking of no disrespect, what did Ripa's husband, Mark Consuelos, think of the post? "I thought it was fantastic. I agreed with what he said. She makes me feel a certain way as well," he tells Andy Cohen. "What are you going to do? Be angry at Justin Bieber?"

Summer savings on summer sailings

BCFERRIES

There's no better time than now to plan your British Columbia summer getaway.

With the BC Ferries Size up the Savings promotion in full swing, British Columbians and visitors can travel for cheaper with a boat, RV or trailer.

From June 17 to Sept. 13, travellers with private passenger vehicles over 20 feet in length on select routes will pay only $2 per additional foot on their vehicles instead of $6.35 — that's a savings of $4.35 per extra foot.

Travellers pay a flat rate for the first 20 feet of their vehicle, but add-ons, such as boats or trailers, often exceed the limit. Luckily, BC Ferries lets passengers size up for less while travelling between Metro Vancouver (Tsawwassen) and Victoria (Swartz Bay), and Vancouver (Tsawwassen) and Nanaimo (Duke Point).

The timing is perfect for anyone hoping to head out on a summer adventure, like a camping or kayak trip that requires travelling with large equipment.

Many people visit the B.C. Interior but Vancouver Island also has a lot to offer. Park your RV at Port McNeill and enjoy a round of golf backed by stunning views of the ocean and mountains.

Take advantage of the Size up the Savings promotion to bike on some of Nanaimo's trails that span over 130 kilometres. Or, bring your boat along to your favourite fishing spot.

Travellers will not only save over 66 per cent per additional foot on extra length passenger vehicles, but they can also avoid peak travel times.

The ferries are popular — the Swartz Bay route has run up to 32 sailings a day and the Duke Point route has run up to 16 per day. In July of a previous year, more than 650,000 vehicles were on the Swartz Bay run and more than 220,000 vehicles were on the Duke Point run.

Size up the Savings is perfect for anyone wanting to explore more of B.C.'s west coast at a reduced cost.

The offer is valid on Wednesday and Saturday sailings starting at 4 p.m., and on Sunday sailings prior to 9 a.m.

Reservations are strongly recommended and can be made online at bcferries.com or by calling 1-888-BC FERRY.

Caps' Kah an 'important' presence for head coach

MLS

Veteran's scoring display has him up for weekly honour

Cam Tucker
Metro | Vancouver

Here's something the Vancouver Whitecaps and their supporters won't hear often: Pa-Modou Kah nominated for MLS goal of the week.

Already named to the league's team of the week, Kah's second goal in the Whitecaps' 3-0 road win over rival Seattle Sounders FC has been nominated for goal of the week.

Having celebrated his 35th birthday last week, Kah celebrated a sweet little backheel deflection off a Christian Techera shot early in the second half and the rout was on from there, as the Vancouver side climbed to the top of the Western Conference standings with the win.

Now in his third year in the league, and first with the Whitecaps, Kah has never scored more than one goal in an MLS season. That all changed within the span of 43 minutes over the weekend, when he opened the scoring early in the first half and provided insurance in a thrilling manner in the second.

The Whitecaps' Pa-Modou-Kah, left, blasts a shot into the Sounders' net for one of his two goals on Saturday in Seattle. DEAN RUTZ/THE SEATTLE TIMES/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Head coach Carl Robinson expressed to reporters in Seattle some surprise that Kah was capable of such a finish, but he also praised Kah for his overall performance this year.

Outside of some struggles and giveaways in the earliest days of his Whitecaps tenure, Kah's presence as an experienced central defender has been just as advertised when Robinson brought him into the club in January.

> He's been brilliant since he joined the club.
> Carl Robinson on Pa-Modou Kah

"He's been brilliant since he joined the club," said Robinson.

"He got a little bit of criticism early on. Unfairly criticized because he's so important to me. From a young manager's point of view, you need your senior players and they come up big from Monday to Friday as well as sometimes on Saturday.

"But he's so important in the locker-room for me."

The Whitecaps depth at centre back — and throughout the lineup — has been put through a number of tests this year, with suspensions and injuries. That's likely not going to change as the summer progresses.

The win in Seattle kick-started the busiest month of the year for Vancouver, and it continues this week with a CONCACAF Champions League match between the Whitecaps and Sounders FC at BC Place Stadium on Wednesday.

Price is money in Jays debut

David Price Day had everything from rousing ovations and powering strikeouts to the thrill of danger and the offensive explosion the Toronto Blue Jays are known for.

Thanks to 11 strikeouts from Price in eight strong innings, his debut was also a 5-1 victory against the Minnesota Twins that put the Blue Jays in a tie for an American League wild-card spot.

"I just wanted to go out there and have fun, pitch as deep as possible into the game and keep it close for our offence," a smiling Price said. "I'm definitely thrilled with the way today went."

MONDAY In Toronto

BLUE JAYS	TWINS

Price was dominant all afternoon, especially after he gave up a home run to Torii Hunter in the second and loaded the bases with no outs in the fourth. The ace left-hander acquired last week from the Detroit Tigers showed why the Blue Jays were willing to pay a hefty price, retiring the final 15 batters he faced.

As he walked off the mound following his 119th pitch, Price tipped his cap to the sellout crowd of 45,766 at Rogers Centre that fixated on and adored his every move.

"That was the best atmosphere I've ever been in," Price said.

Ryan Goins had a solo homer, while Josh Donaldson added a two-run shot, his 27th homer of the season, and later heard chants of "M-V-P."

MLB BRIEFS

Mets mangle Marlins, take lead in NL East

Yoenis Cespedes hit three doubles and the New York Mets took over first place in the NL East, routing the Miami Marlins 12-1 Monday night.

Fresh off sweeping Washington, the Mets won their fourth in a row and moved a game ahead of the Nationals for the division lead.

Cespedes, acquired last week from Detroit, played for the third time with the Mets and tied the team record for doubles in a game. He drove in four runs.

Rookie pitcher, D-Backs hand Nats 4th straight loss

Rookie Zack Godley pitched six scoreless innings to continue a stellar start to his career, and the Arizona Diamondbacks homered four times in a 6-4 victory over the Washington Nationals on Monday night.

Nick Ahmed homered and had four hits as the Diamondbacks improved to 5-2 on their 10-game, bi-coastal road trip while handing the Nationals their fourth straight loss.

Godley (3-0) won two of those games, and with Monday's victory he becomes the second Arizona pitcher to win in each of his first three major league outings. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rangers' Beltre records his third career cycle

Adrian Beltre had his third career cycle Monday night, becoming the first major-league player since the 1930s to accomplish that feat.

Beltre homered in the fifth inning for the Texas Rangers to complete the cycle, doing so against three different Houston pitchers. The third baseman also had a two-run triple in the first inning, a double in the second and a single in the third against AL West-leading Houston.

United back on the hunt

PREMIER LEAGUE PREVIEW

Red Devils contenders again ahead of new season

For a club of Manchester United's standing, two years out of the Premier League title conversation is two too many.

There are reasons to be optimistic that the run won't stretch to a third season, even though the 20-time English champions head into the new campaign with as many questions as answers.

Louis van Gaal is starting his second season in charge and feels his philosophy is beginning to permeate the club. The Dutchman believes his squad is better balanced after the off-season signings of midfielders Bastian Schweinsteiger and Morgan Schneiderlin, right back Matteo Darmian, forward Memphis Depay and goalkeeper Sergio Romero.

Throw in its return to the Champions League and another strong set of pre-season results, including a win against European champion Barcelona, and there's every reason to feel United should improve on seventh- and fourth-place finishes in the last two seasons.

Newcomer Memphis Depay will be counted on to complement Wayne Rooney in the Man United attack. STEPHEN LAM/GETTY IMAGES

Not everything is rosy at Old Trafford, though.

United looks short up front following the departure of Robin van Persie and Radamel Falcao. Wayne Rooney starts the season as the club's only senior striker, although the currently injured Javier Hernandez is back from his loan spell at Real Madrid.

David de Gea, arguably United's best player last season and the main reason the team is back in the Champions League, remains a question mark. The is heavily linked with a move to Madrid and has barely featured in pre-season.

€63M

A person told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity that Manchester United have sold Angel Di Maria to Paris St. Germain for a transfer fee "in the region of 63 million euros. ($69 million US)."

And Van Gaal has acknowledged his squad still the lacks the kind of star attacking quality that is sprinkled throughout European heavyweights Barcelona, Madrid and Bayern Munich.

"We can use much more creativity," Van Gaal said during the pre-season U.S. tour.

United's first task this season will be to win its Champions League playoff at the end of August to advance to the group stage. Another of Van Gaal's priorities will be to start better than last year, with United's title chances virtually over after picking up just 13 points in the opening 10 rounds.

If that happens, United could yet be back as a genuine contender in the title race, as it should be after spending about 230 million pounds ($360 million US) on new signings in the last 12 months. As it stands, there is a feeling that Chelsea will again be too strong for United this season, perhaps even Manchester City and Arsenal. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

2016 SUMMER OLYMPICS

Universities to help clean up Rio waters

Rio de Janeiro Governor Luiz Fernando Pezao signed a deal Monday with several Brazilian universities and research institutes to develop a plan for cleaning up the polluted waters of the city's sewage-strewn Guanabara Bay, where Olympic sailing events will be held.

Pezao hailed the deal as a "very important step" toward the long-promised cleanup, which has dragged on for more than 20 years with little progress.

As part of Brazil's Olympic project, authorities pledged more than six years ago to drastically cut the amount of raw human sewage in the bay before the 2016 games. But only one of the eight promised treatment plants aimed at filtering much of the waste out of the rivers that have become open-air sewage ditches has been built, and the bay's once-crystalline waters remain fetid.

An Associated Press investigation published last week revealed high counts of disease-causing viruses directly linked to human sewage in Olympic waters.

AP analysis showed dangerously high levels of viruses and bacteria from sewage in venues where about 1,400 athletes will compete in water sports, in the games which open in a year — Aug. 5, 2016.

In a statement from his office, Pezao was quoted as saying that since Rio won its Olympic bid in 2009, the city has boosted the treatment of sewage that once flowed into the bay from 17 per cent to 49 per cent. The original promise was to treat 80 per cent of sewage that ends up in the bay by the 2016 games, but state and municipal officials have repeatedly acknowledged there's no way that pledge will be met.

Internet portal UOL quoted Pezao as saying "we made a mistake. We can't continue to make more mistakes." He added that the government wouldn't commit to any further cleanup targets before the necessary studies had been done, the UOL report said.

It also quoted Rogerio Vale, who was representing Rio's federal university at Monday's signing event, as saying, "We're working toward a gradual plan and a long-term recuperation of the bay." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The changing face of pro coaching

ATHLETICS

Women find work leading highest-level sports teams

Becky Hammon believes the possibilities are limitless for women coaching in pro sports.

One year ago this week, she broke the gender barrier, becoming the first full-time paid female assistant coach in the NBA. Now Hammon's happy to see she's no longer the only woman in the profession.

Nancy Lieberman accepted an assistant coaching job recently with the Sacramento Kings, and the Arizona Cardinals made Jen Welter the NFL's first female coach last week.

"I think anything is possible," Hammon said Sunday before the New York Liberty honoured her at a game. "Just because something's never been done doesn't mean it can't be done. Leadership has no gender. The point is, do you know basketball? Do you know what it takes to lead people?"

Clearly for Hammon, the answer was yes. The 5-foot-6 former WNBA star once hoped to play in the NBA. Now she's a trailblazer of a different sort.

"If you have a daughter, or even a woman in your life, it is worth supporting because of the bigger picture, because of the opportunities it will lead to down the road for little girls," Hammon said. "We're not asking the male to get up and leave his seat. We're just saying scoot over a little bit. Make a little room at the table for the ladies."

NBA Commissioner Adam Silver sees Hammon and Lieberman as the start of something. He has "no doubt" there will be a female head coach one day.

"I think just like we've seen enormous change in our society, just in the last decade, I think that's another ceiling, another barrier that will be broken," Silver said last month. "And it takes women like Becky being out there. You need pioneers, and there's been other pioneers before her, but I think you couldn't ask for more of a complete package in terms of former player, student of the game and someone who's able to work within a strong organization like the Spurs."

Washington paying attention to RG3

Wide receiver DeSean Jackson likes what he's seeing from Robert Griffin III and the Washington Redskins' other two quarterbacks through the first five days of training camp.

"I definitely have seen progression in RG3 and all the other quarterbacks this year too," the speedy receiver said Monday before the team worked in full pads for the first time.

"I think it's a year-to-year basis," he said. "Them guys are young. They have some experience early in their career. They just kind of have to build on that, but I've definitely being seeing them guys out here making some great throws, tremendous reads and getting the ball to where it needs to go to at the right time."

The Redskins used Griffin, Kirk Cousins and Colt McCoy behind centre last season, and Jackson says that can only be a positive. Griffin was sidelined by a dislocated left ankle early in the season, giving way to Cousins, and Griffin then was benched so McCoy could play. Griffin returned late in the season and played in nine games as the team finished 4-12.

For the year, Griffin completed almost 69 per cent of his attempts (147 of 214) for 1,694 yards, but with just four touchdown passes and six interceptions.

Miller signs with T-wolves for one-year contract

The Minnesota Timberwolves have completed their one-year contract with veteran point guard Andre Miller.

The deal was agreed to last week and announced Monday.

The 39-year-old Miller gives the Wolves a dependable, experienced player at a position with oft-injured starter Ricky Rubio and 19-year-old rookie Tyus Jones. This is Miller's eighth NBA team in his 17th season in the league.

He averaged 4.4 points, 3.5 assists and 15.5 minutes per game last season, playing for Washington and then Sacramento after being traded to the Kings.

Only twice in his career has he played in fewer than 80 games: 2011-12 with Denver and 2013-14 with both the Nuggets and the Wizards. Miller leads all active players with 8,437 assists, putting him ninth all time.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
Negative feelings will be swept away both at home and at work and life will be fun again. It will be even more fun if you help those who are feeling down learn to smile again.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
If you made an error recently then now is the time to stand up and admit it. Loved ones won't think any the less of you, in fact they will be impressed by your courage.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Don't worry if you have been unable to get through to loved ones because today's Venus-Jupiter union will make words redundant. They will see by the look in your eyes that your feelings for them have grown.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
There are things you have been unable to do of late but they will now come easy to you. In fact, there is nothing you cannot accomplish if you want it enough. Just don't waste time chasing what you don't need.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Your confidence will improve, especially in one-to-one relationships. All the doubts, fears and anxieties of the past will be swept away by what takes place over the next few days.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Take stock of where you have been and where you intend to go in the very near future. Don't worry that you cannot make things happen immediately. There is no need to rush.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You are more likely to reach the top of your chosen profession if you are prepared to work as part of a team rather than try to do everything yourself. Share the workload today.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
No one can get the better of you now, you are just too sharp. On the work front especially, your star is on the rise and people in positions of authority are watching you closely.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
No matter what certain people may be telling you there is every chance that you will taste success over the next few days. But it's only a chance, it's not guaranteed. Get up and out and make things happen.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Something that has been worrying you will finally be resolved today and the sense of relief will last throughout the week. Now, why not go out and try something different?

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
No matter how many upheavals there have been lately, what happens today will put everything in perspective. You have precious little to worry about.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Get things done. Even if you prefer to leave the nuts and bolts to other people you will actually enjoy taking care of details today. Just don't lose sight of the bigger picture.
